CARELESSNESS — Three fire companies responded to a fire alarm to the home of John Stefferud, 1231 Monroe street, yesterday afternoon at 5:45 o'clock when burning paper boxes and rubbish in the basement threatened the house. Neighbors seeing the smoke pouring from the house extinguished the blaze before the firemen arrived. No damage was done. It was believed children, who were home alone, started the blaze while playing with matches.

MARRIED

The marriage of Miss Lottie C. Graf, who formerly was stenographer in the office of the Register of Deeds, to Mr. John J. Stefferud of Barron, took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. George Schroeder at noon on Thursday, April 13. The Rev. Harris performed the ceremony. A splendid wedding dinner was served the guests by Mrs. Schroeder. The young couple will live at Westby where the groom is employed.

The bride is a personal friend of Mrs. Schroeder and the groom belonged to Mr. Harris' former parish. He is a war veteran and was on the Tuscania when that ship was torpedoed. He lost all his possessions and just escaped with his life.

Children:

Theodore John Stefferud

Theodore John Stefferud passed away peacefully on October 19, 2006 in Palm Springs, California, at the age of 83, with his wife and three children at his side.

Ted was born on June 10, 1923 in Sparta, Wisconsin. He enjoyed boating on the Puget Sound in Washington and on Lake Elsinore in California. He also enjoyed swimming, attending auctions, building, and repairing things. In his later years, Ted enjoyed watching Westerns and visiting friends and family around the country in his motor home.

Ted learned the carpentry trade from his father, and worked as a carpenter in several states. He built two homes, one in Washington and one in Northern California. Ted served in the U.S. Army in W.W.II. He learned to be a machinist by attending trade school and serving an apprenticeship. He worked as a supervisor in the machining department at Boeing Aircraft in Seattle.

Ted owned and operated many businesses including an Enco gas station in Seattle and three machine shops, one in Wisconsin making cabbage planters, one in Riverside making motorcycle tools and accessories and one in Rail Road Flat, California making specialty parts.

Ted is survived by his wife of 55 years, Doris; his son, Kenneth Stefferud; his daughter, Kristine Stefferud; his daughter Kay Stefferud and her husband Curtis Clinton; his sister, Luella Engelbert; his brother, Einar Stefferud and sister-in-law Donna; his brother-in-laws, Frederick and Harry Greenwald; and his four grandchildren, Nickolas, Catherine, Daniel and Margaret Clinton.

A celebration of life will be 2:00 p.m. Saturday, November 11, 2006 at the Bermuda Palms Mobile Home Park Club House in Indio, California.

In lieu of flowers, donations can be made to the Salvation Army in his name.

Email pioneer

Stef got involved with the Internet in 1975, and soon became a player in the developing email infrastructure. He had a credible claim to have started the very first email mailing list.

“Stef was a brilliant, insightful, and warm human being whose virtues were sometimes hidden behind a somewhat argumentative exterior.”

Einar A. Stefferud (Stef) (11 January 1930 – 22 September 2011) was a computer researcher and entrepreneur, who made many significant contributions to the development of the Internet, particularly in the areas of IETF RFCs and standards, secure online payment systems, DNS, and secure email. Stefferud was one of the original designers of the MIME protocol for sending multimedia Internet electronic mail.

Creating new paradigms was part of Stefferud's life. This experience was presented in his classic talk, What is the Internet Paradigm?^[1] cup electronic mail.

"At first telephones weren't interconnected. You had to subscribe to 30 different services in order to reach everyone," says Einar Stefferud, president of Network Management Associates, a communications consulting firm in Huntington Beach.

Stefferud predicts that the arrival of X.400 could have broader implications for the personal computer industry.

"Personal computers stopped selling because stand-alone machines are relatively limited," he says. "When Aunt Sue can not only store her recipes on a personal computer but exchange them easily with friends all over the world, then it (the PC business) will explode."

First Virtual's president, Stein is also a financial adviser to rock musicians, including Rod Stewart, Kenny Loggins and Peter Gabriel, and is chairman of the organization that manages Jack Murphy Stadium in San Diego.

His technical experts are three computer scientists who are known as Internet gurus — Nathaniel Borenstein, Einar Stefferud and Marshall Rose.

Electronic Data Systems, one of the nation's leading providers of electronic financial transaction services, will provide data processing for First Virtual. First USA, the Texas bank and credit card issuer, will provide the credit card authorization and payment-clearing services.

Internet Corp. holds 1st meeting

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — Much like cyberspace itself, there was a chorus of different voices at the first public meeting of the group selected to run the Internet.

The board for the California-based Internet Corporation for Assigned Names and Numbers (ICANN) faced the public Saturday in Cambridge, and it was a rough crowd.

Many were skeptical about the corporation, which was picked by the Clinton administration to tentatively manage the Internet so the government does not have to handle the job.

"What you all have to put in your hearts as you go forward is to create a space where an open public forum exists," audience member Richard Snow told the board. "I'm placing my faith in you."

ICANN's main responsibility is to oversee the assignment of Internet domain names, such as those that end with ".com" or ".net."

That may appear minor, but the Internet's growth as an information and commercial network means any change that might affect its reliability is closely watched by Internet users. It is estimated that about 70 million Americans use the Internet.

Earlier this year, the government decided to turn over responsibility for the Internet to a private, nonprofit, U.S.-based group of 19 people.

For several years, Network Solutions, a Herndon, Va.-based company, had been awarded the exclusive contract to register and assign domain names, charging $119 for a two-year registration.

That arrangement will remain in place for now, but private companies demanding a chance to compete with Network Solutions were the driving force behind the government's decision to have ICANN supervise the operation for now.

Some Internet users are suspicious of ICANN because its decision-making process was not public, raising concerns about a lack of adequate financial accountability.

Critics charge that if ICANN is not reorganized, the corporation will take on tremendous power to set policy, set standards and influence — or even control — the development of the Internet.

Some of ICANN's early priorities will be to make the final decisions on how to open up the registration of ".com," ".net," and ".org" domains, how and when to add new domains and who will have authority over Internet country codes, the two-letter domains such as ".us" and ".uk."

At Saturday's meeting, Chairwoman Esther Dyson asked for the trust of the Internet community. Critics said that trust had to be earned.

"There's no other way to do this, and begging is not a good strategy," said Einar Stefferud of the Open Root Server Confederation, a rival group that submitted proposals on how to organize the corporation. "We want this to be organized around principle, not around people."

“The stranglehold will be loosened at least,” said Einar Stefferud, a retired Internet management consultant who lives in Huntington Beach, Calif. “The fact of the matter is that the industry really thrives on competition and open interfaces,” while “the essence of Microsoft’s success is in their legal department.”
